Presenting a fascinating view of the civilizations that flourished in South and Central America before the arrival of the European conquerors, this study examines the intricate myths that underpinned the belief systems of the Inca, Maya, and Aztecs, describing gods such as the plumed Quetzalcoatl, his enemy Tecatlipoca, lord of the night winds, and Pachacamac, the Peruvian spirit of the earth. This thorough investigation observes the Toltec and Aztec cultures of central America. About the Author: Lewis Spence was a Scottish anthropologist and journalist and a compiler of Scottish folklore. He researched the mythology and culture of the New World, Western Europe, and northwest Africa.
