In the period between about 1820 and about 1870 German psychiatry was born and reborn first as anthropologically orientated psychiatry and then as biomedical psychiatry. There has to date been virtually no systematic examination of the philosophical motives which determined these two conceptions of psychiatry. The aim of our study is to make up for this omission to the best of our ability. The work is aimed at a very diverse readership in the first place historians of For the reader interested in conceptions of what psychology might be or in what historically has been thought to be rationally required to make psychology possible this book is an invaluable resource. For the philosophical issues covered
